1	I don't know and it's a worry for us as we've not accessed social care, but some sort of regular respite would help- we've ended up organising it ourselves through local mainstream playschemes, but it has been going OK, so maybe we don't need the Local Authority to offer this as much as some other families do with children with a higher level of need.	3/24/2014 6:05 AM

1	It appears to me that at present there is no kind of inspection process in the schools as in my experience, main stream education has failed my 2 children with additional needs.	3/24/2014 10:53 PM
2	I'm a little concerned that I have not been sent any literature regarding all this.	3/24/2014 6:40 AM
3	It feels like the EHC Plans are in their infancy in Torbay and that the consultation has only just begun. I think parents and carers need to be kept informed and that there's a lot we still don't know. I hope parent's and carer's views will be listened to and acted on as we really do know our children best and have their interests at heart! It's an anxious time for parents wondering how these changes will practically impact on our children and whether they really will receive the support they need and hopefully improved support to what they now receive.	3/24/2014 6:09 AM
4	Ofsted could included in their inspections, access (e.g. automatic doors, toilets for disabled users or those with special needs). it would be helpful if Ofsted were aware of the sen policy a school has and ensure that this is being implemented. however I am aware that due to schools prior knowledge of an inspection things like doors can be switched on to appear as though this is the norm. it may seem a small thing but if a student cannot access their school as easily as other student it could effect the view of staff, school etc and will not be as prepared to trust or be educated / helped by people that cannot even accommodate the little things	3/24/2014 4:49 AM
